Mission Statement

The mission of the Ford Institute for Human Security is to promote effective responses to severe threats faced by individuals and their communities as a result of conflict and deprivation. To that end, the Institute conducts research on the causes and consequences of political violence and economic underdevelopment, and works to advance the idea that governments have a sovereign responsibility to protect their people.

History and Funding

The Ford Institute is a part of the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs (GSPIA) at the University of Pittsburgh. It is dedicated to advancing the study and practice of human security by conducting policy-oriented academic research, providing resources on human security to a broad audience, and reaching out to a network of scholars and organizations engaged in human security work.

The Institute began in 2003 as a research institute with an endowment from the Ford Motor Company. Under the direction of Professor Simon Reich, the Ford Institute was instrumental in developing one of the first human security courses of study in the United States. In 2009, Dean John T. S. Keeler appointed Professor Taylor Seybolt as Director of the Ford Institute.

In 2011-2012, the Ford Institute underwent some major changes, most notably by naming Professor Louis A. Picard as the new director. Professor Picard, whose research and consulting specialization includes international development, governance, development management, and capacity building, is the Institute’s third director.

GSPIA’s human security major and opportunities provided by the Ford Institute now attract graduate students from across the United States and around the world. The Institute’s faculty affiliates conduct cutting-edge research from a wide range of disciplinary perspectives, including political science, economics, public health, and education. Graduate students provide vital research assistance. The Institute’s work is generously supported by the Ford endowment and project-specific grants from other funders.

Objectives

To fulfill its mission, the Ford Institute activities are designed to achieve four core objectives.

- Build the human security program at GSPIA by providing students with educational programming and experience.
- Develop a collaborative network of scholars and practitioners throughout the University and in the wider Pittsburgh community.
• Contribute to the growing field of human security nationally and internationally through policy-oriented academic research.
• Expand the research capacity of the multidisciplinary University of Pittsburgh Governance Group in support of democracy and human rights.

Ford Institute Programs in 2011-2012

Ford Institute programs are designed to provide educational resources, reach out to build interest, and promote progressive research for a broad audience of students, practitioners and intellectuals. During the 2011-2012 academic year, we brought a wide-ranging set of people, resources, and ideas to GSPIA and the broader Pittsburgh community.

Ford Institute Speaker Series

The Ford Institute Speaker Series continued to be one of the Institute’s most important outreach activities this past year. The Speaker Series remains a signature promotional component for the Institute, advancing the Institute’s objectives through engaging presentations and lectures from a variety of different speakers. During the 2011 – 2012 academic year, the Ford Institute hosted ten speakers, who ranged from academics, to practitioners, to policymakers.

The Speaker Series were held in a variety of locations. Some speakers lectured in classrooms in GSPIA or other areas of the university, while others had more intimate discussions with students over lunch. The Speaker Series attracts a broad range of audiences. While it is most popular with GSPIA students, the Series draws a considerable presence from students in other areas of the university, faculty members, as well as the public. Audience members found that the Series allowed them to engage in discussions on human security issues on a different level.

Below is a list of speakers who participated in this year’s Speaker Series. Data on attendance of the Speaker Series and Film Series is available in Annex A of this report.

Collaborative Presentations and Film Screenings

In addition to its Speaker Series, the Ford Institute worked with other University Centers and Institutes, and faculty members to bring additional expertise to the University of Pittsburgh.

- Film: Staging Hope | Feb. 7, 2012
  Co-sponsored with Pitt STAND, Staging Hope documents a two-week theatre program in northern Uganda. Through the intensive drama workshop, the Ugandan teens were able to tell their remarkable stories, teach their communities about important social issues such as peace building and HIV/AIDS, and begin to heal from the trauma of living for years with the Lord’s Resistance Army in their midst.

- Film: Blood in the Mobile | Feb. 7, 2012
  Co-sponsored with Pitt STAND, Blood in the Mobile shows the connection between our mobile phones and violence in the Congo. It is a project about one of the most dangerous places on earth, about human courage, and above all, about hope and the search for solutions.

- Presentation: Aili Mari Tripp, University of Wisconsin-Madison | Feb. 10, 2012
  Women, Power and Peacemaking in Africa. Sponsored by the Sociology Department, Women’s Studies, African Studies, Global Studies, the International Development Program and GSPIA.

- Film: Sand and Sorrow | Feb. 16, 2012
  Co-sponsored with Pitt STAND, featured a Q&A with John Prendergast. Sand and Sorrow examines the international community’s “legacy of failure” to respond to crimes against humanity. The film analyzes the historical events that have given rise to the willingness of Sudan’s government to kill and displace its own indigenous people.

Visiting Fellows
The Institute began the Visiting Fellows program in 2010-2011. During the 2011-2012 academic year the Institute welcomed John Prendergast as its visiting fellow. (See Annex B for complete 2012 schedule).

John Prendergast
John Prendergast is a human rights activist and best-selling author who has worked for peace in Africa for more than 25 years. He is the co-founder of the Enough Project, an initiative to end genocide and crimes against humanity affiliated with the Center for American Progress. John has worked for the Clinton White House, the Department of State, two members of Congress, the National Intelligence Council, UNICEF, Human Rights Watch, the International Crisis Group, and the U.S. Institute of Peace.

Mr. Prendergast was a visiting fellow for two weeks, from Feb. 7 until Feb. 12, 2012. While at the Ford Institute he participated in a film series, gave lectures, spoke to students, and was featured on a panel at the Carnegie Library in Squirrel Hill. Mr. Prendergast’s lecture on Feb. 8, “Why South Sudan Succeeded, Darfur Failed & the Implications of the Arab Spring,” discussed why South Sudan peacefully seceded, after struggling to do so for two decades, and why President al-Bashir of Sudan accepted the outcome but still poses many threats to the region. He also spoke about Sudan’s neighbors that have been transformed by the Arab Spring, and what Sudan might expect to happen next. Mr. Prendergast also participated in a Q&A session following the screening of a film, “Sand and Sorrow”, which examines the international community’s “legacy of failure” to respond to crimes against humanity, using the Sudanese government’s willingness to kill and displace its own indigenous people as a backdrop. During his second week as a visiting fellow, Mr. Prendergast joined the Ford Institute’s director, Dr. Louis A. Picard, on a panel hosted by the Pittsburgh Darfur Emergency Coalition. “Challenges for Sudan, Challenges for Advocates,” also featured Abdalmageed Haroun, founder of the Human Rights and Advocacy Network for Democracy in Sudan, and Benedict Killang, representing the Sudanese Community in Pittsburgh.

Besides his numerous talks about his own experiences in the field, Mr. Prendergast gave career advice to groups of students, as well as made himself available for one-on-one sessions with students interested in meeting with him. During his stay at the Ford Institute, Mr. Prendergast was also featured in an article on the front page of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. Waging Peace – Pittsburgh Post-Gazette March 14, 2012

During Mr. Prendergast’s two-week tenure as a Ford Institute Visiting Fellow, over 130 students, faculty and community members attended his lectures, film screenings and scheduled time to speak to him directly during office hours. See Annex A for figures on attendance.

Research in 2010-2011

Working Groups

Over the past two years the Ford Institute has had three working groups. Each of these groups is led by faculty members, but the groups are essentially student-driven research teams. The working groups provide students with valuable research experience while also offering faculty the chance to advance their own research agenda. The following is a description of the Ford Institute’s three working groups:

Gender, Islam and Development
Muge Finkel, Faculty leader
This working group explores how religion, Islam in particular, influence gender policies in contexts marked by different histories of nation-building, state-society relations, political systems, and religious and secular traditions.

Property Rights in Post-Conflict States
Jennifer and Ilia Murtazashvilli, Faculty leaders
This working group assesses property rights and land reform in post-conflict countries, where one of the defining features is property insecurity. Weak or ineffective property rights reduce prospects for economic development, resource management, and even development of the state itself.

The Responsibility to Protect
Taylor Seybolt, Faculty leader
This working group addresses the implications of the argument that governments have a sovereign responsibility to protect their people from atrocities and, if a government fails to provide protection, outside actors have a responsibility to step in. One dimension of the work looks at the causes of mass atrocities, specifically the triggers of genocide and mass killing. The second dimension looks at international responses, specifically whether the concept of R2P has led to changes in the frequency or conduct of military interventions to protect civilians.

The Ford Institute is expecting several new groups focusing on indigenous peoples and sub-national conflict to begin working in the Fall 2012.

CountingCasualties.org

The Ford Institute collaborated with faculty from Carnegie Mellon University to develop the website CountingCasualties.org. The aim of the new website is to advance the science of casualty recording and estimation. The website is developing into a forum for members of the civilian casualty recording and estimation community to share, discuss, debate, and hopefully to begin to resolve the wide variety of methodological and theoretical challenges they face on a daily basis. Over the past year the Ford Institute has continuously updated the website with news on casualties throughout the world.

This site grew out of a National Science Foundation (NSF) funded conference, held in October 2009 at Carnegie Mellon University. The Ford Institute interns and administrator maintain the website on a daily basis.

Strengthening and Expanding the Ford Institute

Ford Institute Website

The website remains a central location for providing information about the Ford Institute’s upcoming events, recent publications, and general information about the Institute. The site features an active “Recent News” section containing news stories written by Ford Institute interns as well as other affiliated students. It also serves as an important marketing tool by publicizing the numerous activities and research that the Ford Institute is involved in.

Additionally, incoming and prospective students refer to the website to learn about the Institute as well as find out more about the human security major.

The site is hosted by a GSPIA server and is regularly maintained and updated by Ford Institute staff.

Contact List

The Ford Institute created a contact database in 2010 to promote our programs to a wider audience. By obtaining audience email addresses from the Speaker Series and other events, as well as through identifying key colleagues in Human Security, the database added an additional 200 contacts during the 2011-2012 year. Currently the database has more than 700 contacts of students, faculty, alumni, and colleagues worldwide.
Publicity

Over the past year the Ford Institute has continued its strategic marketing plan to raise awareness about the Institute’s research and events, both within the university community and beyond. The Ford Institute’s logo is prominently featured on all materials (i.e. publications, brochures, flyers, etc.) The branding initiative also extended to electronic materials such as the website, social media and email news alerts.

GSPIA’s E-Newsletter regularly features Ford Institute news items. GSPIA -News not only reaches a broad audience through its database, but current and archived issues are also available on GSPIA’s website. Additionally, Ford Institute staff and interns coordinate regularly with the Office of Communications on marketing materials and stories.

A student-led social media publicity effort was also initiated this year. A Facebook group geared towards Human Security majors in GSPIA was created to host discussions around human security issues and inform members about Ford Institute activities. It also acted as an important forum to let first-year GSPIA students know about the Ford Institute and what it has to offer.

Governance Group

The Governance Group is a partnership of the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs (GSPIA) and the Department of Political Science, along with faculty from three other units, Economics, Law, and Education. It serves as the primary center for applied research on governance and institutions in the University of Pittsburgh. It is the entity within the University that implements activities in the democracy and governance areas that are supported by grants and contracts. The Group is comprised of 24 full time Pitt faculty members. Their work can be supplemented by more than a dozen fellows who are linked to the University but work for other organizations or independently. The Governance Group Website is: https://www.governance.gspia.pitt.edu/.

The Governance Group’s main objectives are to extend, integrate, and focus the University of Pittsburgh’s commitment to exploring issues related to governance, both internationally and domestically, through its own initiatives and in response to public sector and private sector requests for proposals. It seeks to support interdisciplinary, collaborative research projects among teams of faculty and graduate students to work on understanding and solving critical problems related to governance and institutional strengthening, and to maintain a productive dialogue between the academic and policy making communities in the process of translating theory into practice.

The Governance Group has expertise in six substantive areas including political institutions, processes and parties; capacity building and public sector reform; rule of law; decentralization, sub-national governance and civil society; conflict stabilization and property rights and land tenure.

The group also brings a full spectrum of assessment and evaluation skills to its democracy and governance work, including qualitative and quantitative assessments, and impact evaluation using randomized field experiments and/or longitudinal or other observational methods. Drawing on these capabilities, the Group brings expertise in institutional design and reform; participatory processes; applied research and training; impact evaluation; and advanced survey research and statistical methodologies. Governance Group Faculty have worked in a variety of geographic areas worldwide.

Recent projects undertaken by the Group include an assessment of USAID political party strengthening programs supported under a grant from USAID; research on the design and management of elections in Afghanistan under a subcontract from Democracy International; a macro-statistical analysis of the effects of USAID Democracy and Governance programs supported under a grant from USAID; and a planned set of six impact assessments to be conducted under a sub-contract from Social Impact.

Partnership with University of Witwatersrand’s Graduate School of Public and Development (P&DM) in Johannesburg.

Ford Institute Director Dr. Louis A. Picard traveled to South Africa with Dean John Keeler in September 2011 to strengthen university partnerships and explore international learning opportunities for GSPIA students. The visit revitalized a partnership with P&DM, one of the top policy schools in Africa. P&DM is developing a new program in human security and applied research; GSPIA is expected to collaborate on the project. Dr. Picard played an important role in the creation of P&DM at “Wits” in 1991 and hopes that students from both schools will be able to participate in a semester exchange and internship opportunities.

Human Security Practitioners in Western Pennsylvania

Over the past year the Ford Institute made a concerted effort to create a coalition of human security practitioners located in Western Pennsylvania. On February 16th Visiting Fellow John Prendergast hosted a workshop with various practitioners to discuss strategies to mobilize support for these organizations at a local and regional level. The Practitioners Initiative will provide support for the development of a Western Pennsylvania Coalition of human security and human rights organizations.

Director’s Award

This year the Ford Institute sponsored a grant competition. The Director’s Award is a $4,000 award given to a local organization with some affiliation to GSPIA that is focused on human security issues. The award aims to support policy-oriented research, program development, and/or policy dissemination activities on a human security issue by a Western Pennsylvania profit or nonprofit organization that has an annual operation budget of less than $100,000. This past spring the Director’s Award granted funding to Anzar Exchange ($1,000) and the Foundation for the Realization of Economic Empowerment ($3,000).

Anzar Exchange is a non-profit organization that seeks to strengthen the global community by promoting cross-cultural understanding and sustainable development. Anzar Exchange fulfills its mission through three main programs in the Middle Atlas Mountains of Morocco: Anti-Desertification, Ecotourism, and Goods Exchange & Promotion. Anzar Exchange will use the grant money to make the organization more professional as well as for programming activities in Pittsburgh.

Foundation for the Realization of Economic Empowerment (FREE) is a faith-based Christian developmental organization committed to empowering women to rise above poverty. Its three main areas of focus are teaching sewing skills and developing sewing-related enterprises, teaching financial literacy, and building self-esteem. With the grant money, the project will target a group of women in poverty living in Ng’ombe Compound, a slum of Lusaka, Zambia. Most of the women in the group are HIV+ and many are widows with dependents and are currently living on less than $1 per day. As part of the project, these women will make jewelry using Zambian copper (and eventually silver) and semi-precious stones.

Affiliated Students
During the year, 19 students were associated with the Institute doing in-depth analysis of cutting-edge issues, authoring news stories about our programs, and working on administrative tasks of the Institute. The names of our students appear in Annex C.

Looking Ahead
The Ford Institute plans to continue expanding the scope of its projects, programs and research over the next year. The goal for the Governance Group is to propel it to become self-sustaining and involve more students in professional-level activities, while providing support for research and development for various academic departments. A new initiative by the Ford Institute will seek to involve human security groups working in the field. Focus will be on providing assessments, evaluations and strategic planning research for human security groups. Funding may be either from the collaborating organization or through a third party. The Ford Institute also plans to begin an aggressive search for funding sources, within the range of $10,000 - $25,000, for Ford projects that are specific to the research working groups. Additionally, the Ford Institute intends to expand its links with the Human Security practitioners of Western Pennsylvania by continuing outreach and collaborations. Finally, the Ford Institute will increase and expand the role that students play in the Institute’s operations.

The Ford Institute plans to seek additional funding for select students to carry on administrative and research projects – particularly opportunities with the Governance Group. Another plan of the Ford Institute is to have the working groups take on additional tasks and expand their scope. At this time each faculty coordinator has been asked to identify any funding needs or potential opportunities for his/her group and begin to plan the next step for each group. Most importantly, the Ford Institute wishes to continue its mission to promote effective responses to severe threats faced by individuals and their communities as a result of conflict and deprivation through the involvement of students, scholars and practitioners.
